FETHIYE MOSQUE

Architectural texture and finely detailed mosaics from the late Byzantine period in the church, which was converted into a mosque in 1591.

In fact, it was built as a church by Mihail Glabas Tarkaniotes, one of the Byzantine notables, in the late 13th century. After the conquest of Istanbul, it began to be used as a patriarchate in 1454. With the conquest of Georgia and Azerbaijan in the Persian wars in 1601, it was converted into a mosque as a memory of the conquest. It is today partly a museum housed in a side chapel or parekklesion. One of the most important examples of Constantinople's Palaiologan architecture, the mosque contains the largest quantity of Byzantine mosaics in Istanbul after the Hagia Sophia and The Chora.
